Dear Charlie,

Paul should have gotten the letter in which I raised the question about a little research before you did. However, since then, with a little unintended good luck, someone else has come up with sufficient on it and it no longer needs doing. However, I do appreciate it, and I suppose there will be times when the library should be consulted. I'll feel free to ask.

Your meeting will probably have been held by the time you get this. I hope it was pleasant and successful.

There was one special passage in that page of the LOOK article that I thought might mean something, perhaps explain something, hence I sent it. Not important and no reason for you to recall what brought the connection to my mind.

Long as it takes Jamie to do a letter, + just know it will be a great one when I get it. Please tell her I look forward to it. I can remember when she first began printing, and I know when she took her time and really wanted to, she did very well. After more than a year, I am sure she has progressed.

Best to you both, and thanks,
